Has your workforce moved to remote offices? By now, COVID-19 has probably become a part of your daily reality and your workplace looks much different. Employees as well as their managers also have a new working reality and this may be the best time to invest in corporate coaching.

Corporate coaching doesn't need to be in an office or classroom; it can be virtual. In fact, what better way to get comfortable working remotely than to be coached remotely? Conduent has seasoned coaches available to answer questions and provide insight in how to manage remote individuals and teams. Our coaches have years of experience and are knowledgeable in navigating a remote environment. They are able to provide best practices for working from home, organizational tips/techniques, and will help to resolve potential issues when managing remote individuals and teams.

What Conduent Learning Can do for You

Our Coaching solution is designed to align with your company's long term goals while supporting individuals in your organization. We provide highly skilled and qualified coaches to improve and enhance the employee, manager, leader, and executive leader experience and bring additional value to our client's through creative solutions.

Each of our coaches are industry certified professional coaches with a passion for helping others. We only work with coaches who have a relentless passion for people, process, and performance and who look for every opportunity to make others great. Their goal is to help your company build a strong culture through working with each individual at any and all levels in the organization.

Our coaches can work one-on-one with employees and managers or in team settings with the ability to discuss topics including how to manage a remote team, how to maintain and manage productivity, how to curb distractions, advice on good work from home office settings, career advice, and managing teams in the virtual environment.
